

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An electrode for an electrochemical device includes an organic compound that serves as an active material and a substrate carrying the organic compound. The substrate and the organic compound are held together by a covalent bond. Accordingly, it is possible to suppress the dissolving of the active material into an electrolyte.